

A resident of Wejherowa [Poland], Lili Wysocka second time was among the winners of the international competition for the illustration of the educational book for children. The competition is organized by the American writer Nancy O'Neill.

To the new educational book titled "Guess What is in the Ocean?" (trans. Guess what is in the ocean?) were selected 13 works. Eleven authors illustration comes from the US, one from Italy and one of the Polish, and more specifically with Wejherowa.

Lili's winning work is "Dolphins", this image was painted on canvas with acrylic paints. Laureate pleased that for the second time the children from around the world will be able to see a book illustration of its authorship. In addition, the winning images, will appear as the name and city and state in which they live their creators.

But it's still not all successful young artist. Recently, Lili also qualified for the finals of the district contest "Discovering Talents in Pomerania". So we can safely say that 11-year-old is a talented painter, although she never took drawing and painting lessons.
